A Neglected Duty

It is urged that the investigation of the receivership of the State Bank & Trust company involves a supervision of the courts by the biginistive branch of the state government; the rulings of Judge Lucgan as reported in the Carson newspapers, indicate that the court itself is taking that view of it.

"If the legislature can supervise the courts, why can it not give the condemned man his freedom?" "Why not reverse opinions of the sppreme court in land, water mining matters," "If the legislature is supreme, why the supreme court?" These, and a lot more of similar rot, are arged in behalf of the court and receiver who a few weeks ago were pretending to invite an investigation.

The farther this matter goes the more apparent it becomes that the segistature shirked a duty in not exercising the powers the people gave it by removing a judge from the bench. The legislature is no longer in session and the "stalling" process is again resumed. Of course, the legislature has no right to either alter or revise a court decision but it has the power to remove a judge from the beach without even having the sufficiency of its reasons questioned. And this is what it should have

Now we find a judge whose action has been questioned sitting on his own case. Judicial decency, judicial sense of propriety alone would preclude this, and a judge who is big enough to draw a judicial salary would call to the beach some one whose rulings and final decision would be accepted not only by the supreme court, but by the court of public opinion as well.-Goldfield Tribune.

Judging from the appearance of Carson papers another dodge is being attempted. The papers published a statement that depositors in the defunct State Bank and Trust company were preparing petitions asking Judge Langan to remove Frank L. Wilden from the receivership of the bank and appoint another man in his stead. Judging from the past actions of the Carson depositors, it would not be surprising to note within a few days that it is impossible to secure signatures to the petition, all of which will be taken to mean that the Wilden adherents have won another victory. It looks like a stall and the future will prove if this surmise is correct.

To What End?

Sixteen years ago two Montana mining companies, each the owner of valuable, adjoining properties, became involved in a question of treapass. The litigation that started has been carried on through all the years which have passed, and has only recently been settled; at that, seemingly ending in a compromise. The mines were closed down when the trouble first started and have remained unworked to the present time.

There are many things in connection with such a case as this the story of which would prove of great interest. But that which must always obtrude itself is the question, to what end has been all this litigation?

be that one company has gained an advantage over the other. It may be that money has been secured to cover the estimated damages caused by the trespans. It may be that there were other things is the case not known to the public.

Yet what of the years which have been wasted? The years of expenditures, with no returns? The years when neither side of the controversy dared attempt any work on its property? The years of loss that can hardly be compensated in any profits cleared in the years to Buch instances as these are not at all uncommon in the history of the rich mines of the west.

An in each case the question must arise, to what end is it all? It can hardly be financial, for do not the costs balance any gains received? What then, is the answer?

A movement is reported as under way at Philadelphia to establish there a curb mining market. This move has come on account of the activity in Tonopah shares, many of the Tonopah companies being controlled in Philadelphia. It may be considered as a move to draw concentrating interest in Nevada lastes at the point where control is held.

Now some unreasonable people are growling at the county commissioners because the bridges have not been constructed to span Main street when a flood is traversing that thoroughfare,

A bank receiver," declared one miner to another the other day, "is a person who received what the bank cashler could not."
